CLEAN UP YOUR ACT

Cut back on plastic with the ZeroWater 10-cup Ready-Pour Pitcher (£34.99 inc a filter; zerowater.co.uk). With five stages of filtration, the filter is certified to reduce lead, chromium and mercury, and removes 99.6 per cent of all dissolved solids. Say goodbye to bottled water...

BANISH THE BLUES

With the shorter days still here, it's important your vitamin D levels are topped up. New research from Trinity College, Dublin, has found a deficiency in the sunshine vitamin can lead to a 75 per cent increased risk of depression over a four-year period. The National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (NICE) believes 10 million Brits could have low levels of the vitamin. Find out if you're one of them with BetterYou's Vitamin D Testing Service (£32.95, plus free oral spray; betteryou.com). Or top up with DLux Vitamin D Oral Spray (£5.95; hollandandbarrett.com)

NATURAL HEALTH Q&A

Q What herbal remedies can I use to improve my energy?

'Herbs that boost energy are called adaptogens. Adaptogens reduce the energy drain that accompanies intense emotional, mental or physical exertion. Exertion of any form over a sustained period will deplete energy by creating hormonal and sugar imbalances which often present as fatigue, low mood, poor sleep or sugar cravings. Adaptogens balance hormones and blood sugar, helping boost energy.

'Adaptogenic herbs that improve energy include: Siberian ginseng, which increases stamina and resilience by reducing fatigue from physical exertion; rhodiola rosea – a mood-enhancing herb that increases cognitive energy and concentration by reducing the drain of intense mental activity; schizandra sinensis, a powerful anti-anxiety herb that can help with emotional stress. See your naturopathic herbalist for suitable herbs and lifestyle advice.'
